News from Our Alumni

Hello, it is Aytaç Emir...

In 2019, I completed my undergraduate education at Istanbul Gelisim University, Applied Sciences Faculty, Gastronomy Department. After my undergraduate education, I also completed my master's degree at Istanbul Gelisim University, Graduate Education Institute, graduated in February 2022.

While I was studying for my undergraduate education, I had the opportunity to experience practically the theoretical and applied courses I had at various hotels in the Mediterranean Region. In this way, reinforcing the practical lessons I have taken from my valuable teachers in my education life has taken me one step forward. I have witnessed all the adventures of a food before it enters our kitchen by following the chemistry of food closely with the expert staff of Istanbul Gelisim University and my very valuable scholars. We published this information I learned in Foodlab Magazine with the contribution of my valuable scholars in order to help everyone who is curious and interested in this field. Thus, we have opened different doors to those who are curious about the neurogastronomy adventure of a food. After completing my undergraduate education, I decided to apply to Istanbul Gelisim University Graduate Education Institute, as I thought that knowing the food industry closely would not be enough to become a business owner in the future. Food Features, Menu Planning, Cost Control and Business Management courses that I took in my master's degree made me better equipped in the sector. Inspired by the magazine we published at the university, I opened the FoodLab Acibadem Cafe. Here, I provide sweet and boutique pastry services blended with different flavors.

I have very valuable professors at Istanbul Gelisim University and the Faculty of Applied Sciences, who play the leading role in my education life in my ability to take a quick step in the food sector and adapt all the theoretical and practical knowledge I have acquired to my daily life. I would like to thank all my teachers who take their students one step further with the right guidance and disciplined teaching method.

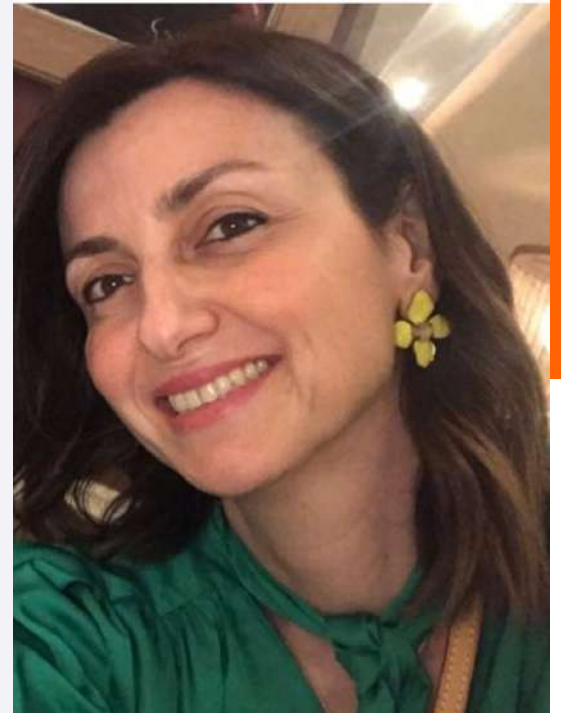

Interview

Head of the Risk Management of Deutsche Bank Inc., Kumru Besim:

“Globalization, both as technology and as the dynamics of existence in different countries and markets, has changed and continues to change the way banking primarily works, service quality, speed and banking understanding.”

Dear Kumru Besim, first, we would like to thank you for sparing time for us in your busy schedule. Ms. Besim, what exactly does a bank’s Risk Management unit cover?

A bank may have to cope with many crises in its cash flow, loans or dividends due to market conditions, the effects of national or international money markets. Before the crisis occurs, it is a must for banking to deal with the situations that may be the subject of the crisis as risk management, with sensitive forecasts or predictions or follow-ups. To make a full definition, Risk Management is the definition and measurement of the risks exposed through the policies and implementation procedures determined to monitor, control and, if necessary, change the risk-return structure of the bank's future cash flows, and accordingly the nature and level of the activities. reporting, monitoring and controlling.

Interview

Banks' Risk Management departments are responsible for ensuring that the risks are understood and adequately evaluated before entering into a transaction, to determine risk management policies and implementation procedures based on risk management strategies, and, if deemed necessary and appropriate, to be effective for significant risks and in accordance with the level of intensity and complexity of the activities that create the risk. They carry out studies based on the design, selection and implementation of the measurement system and models, regularly reviewing the models and making the necessary changes, ensuring that the quantifiable risks remain within the determined limits, and changing the strategy and risk appetite when necessary according to the risk measurement and risk monitoring results. With these efforts to manage risks, the bank's short-term and long-term sustainability, financial reputation, general reputation and, of course, objectives that are compatible with the basic steps of its regular functioning are determined.

Ms. Besim, globalization affects banking as well as all sectors. What are the changing dynamics in banking with the globalizing world?

The banking sector has been intertwined with global markets for many years and the international interaction potential of money markets has always directly concerned the banking sector. These have enabled banks to take more far-sighted and future-oriented steps in their management and strategies. Globalization, both in terms of technology and the dynamics of existence in different countries and markets, has changed and continues to change the way banking works, service quality, speed and understanding of banking. Artificial intelligence products directly affect banking services and make the features of the service comprehensive.

Interview

Artificial intelligence products directly affect banking services and make the features of the service comprehensive. Changing customer expectations for any product today also applies to banking products. In other words, personalized solutions, personalized services, personalized and rapid product development, and dynamic customer relationship management are expected. Moreover, these services are waiting for your customers wherever they are in the world. In my opinion, the most important effect of globalization on banking has been the dissemination of solutions to meet customers' expectations immediately. Customers now demand the same attention, solution, speed and technology from every bank every hour of the day.

Dear Besim, Sustainability understanding has become a rising value in almost every sector. What do you think about the relationship between the banking sector and the Sustainability approach interact?

Of course, Sustainability is a concept that is aware of everyone living in the world and is our responsibility. The banking sector also attaches importance to the understanding of sustainability. We can say that this happens in two ways. The first is the social responsibility activities that banks carry out as an indication that they fulfill their responsibilities towards the world. Bank customers want to see the contributions of their banks to the society, the world and nature...

Second, banks adapt the concept of sustainability to their work, banking activities and understanding. For example, banks have begun to integrate climate risk into their overall risk management framework. In addition, they began to develop taxonomies specific to climate risk and sustainability. New assessment methods have started to come into play, such as the inclusion of sector weaknesses and reputational risks in the transaction evaluation process, and as a result, climate risk-specific customer assessment in certain situations. At the same time, climate risk measurement approaches are being developed.

In parallel with the changes in the climate, banks will reflect the climate crisis factors, especially under credit risk, by taking into account the climate risk-related factors of customers' credit ratings from the point of view of capital demand. Incorporating climate risks into capital demand models; It faces some challenges due to the limited data available and the risk being emerging and long-term in nature. In the coming years, studies will continue for the full inclusion of climate risk factors into more than one risk type.

Interview

What is your advice to our students who want to work in the banking sector?

I would advise young people who want to become a banker to have knowledge about the sector first. In addition to receiving banking education, I particularly recommend them to improve their foreign language knowledge. Human relations have a very important place in banking as in every sector. It is very important to be customer-oriented and to be efficient in teamwork. It is necessary to be very open to innovations because it is one of the sectors that are constantly affected by innovations. It will be very beneficial for their careers to follow the innovations and changes in the sector very closely and adapt quickly.

Dear Kumru Besim, thank you very much for your enlightening information and your participation in our conversation.

Actually, I would like to thank Istanbul Gelisim University, Faculty of Applied Sciences for giving me this opportunity...

KUMRU BESİM

Kumru Besim was born in 1973, graduated from Austrian High School and Istanbul University, Department of Business Administration. After completing the certificate program at the University of California, Berkeley, he worked in the Financial Control and Planning units of various banks since 1998. In 2006, he started to work in the Financial Control unit of Deutsche Bank A.Ş. After establishing the Internal Control unit under the umbrella of Compliance and Internal Control in 2011, he was appointed as the Manager in charge of Risk Management in April 2015, and he still continues in this position.
